CONTENTS

The election history is presented in two volumes:

- Volume 1 – House of Assembly election results
- Volume 2 – Legislative Council election results and a list of candidates for both houses

The results in the individual volumes are presented chronologically in Parts. The starting date for each part is the first election at which a new election system was employed.

Legislative Council:

- Part 1 is defined by the system of first-past-the-post voting in a single, Colony-wide electorate;
- Part 2 by the introduction of election districts;
- Part 3 by the introduction of preferential/contingency voting;
- Part 4 by the return to a single State-wide electorate, full adult suffrage, and proportional representation.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Completion of this project would not have been possible without input from a number of organisations and people.

The compilation of the electoral data was a massive task. Some of the data for the colonial period was compiled in the 1970s, as the basis of research for a thesis. For assistance with this, my thanks to the former manager of the Newspaper Collection in the State Library, Len Marquis.

The collection of the data for the colonial period, and for the century which followed, was undertaken in three key areas. My thanks to the State Library for allowing me access to the original newspapers, and especially to Philippa Clancy, who managed the process of the transfer of numerous volumes from store to the Library. Her interest in, and assistance with the project was appreciated.

My thanks to Howard Coxon, the former Librarian of the Parliamentary Library, for granting permission for the use of the newspaper collection. Jenni Newton of the Library has had a long-term interest in elections, and her assistance with this project was very much appreciated. Sandy Kane of the Library was always willing to offer her expert assistance with a range of difficult photo-imaging requirements.

The State Electoral Office gave strong support for the project, and I would thank especially the former Electoral Commissioner, Steve Tully for his support and willing assistance at all stages. My thanks also to Jade Bruss for her contribution to the data entry and checking processes and to all SEO staff who gave time to proofing.

The preparation of this manuscript involved the compilation, analysis, processing, proof-reading and formatting of thousands of names, data sets, and numbers. Two members of the staff of the State Electoral Office played an invaluable role.

Jane Peace, Senior Research Officer, was involved with the project from its beginning. She organised the production process, and proofread the manuscript, and her proposals about structures were always positive improvements. Her attention to detail is amazing, and the final product owes much to her interest and dedication.

Jasha Bowe took on the responsibility of designing, processing, formatting and preparing an extremely complex manuscript. His computer abilities were impressive, his willingness to deal with problems and incorporate the constant changes was very much appreciated. His always-present good humour and “unflappable” approach, assisted the task a great deal.

The Director of the SA History Trust, Margaret Anderson, was a strong supporter of the project from the beginning, and I thank her for this.

The project could not have been carried out without financial assistance. I thank the South Australian Government, through the Department of the Arts, the State Electoral Office and the History Trust of South Australia for their funding support.

March 2007 – Sesquicentenary of the first elections for responsible government in South Australia in 1857.

INTRODUCTION

This publication reports the results of all elections held for the South Australian parliament since it was inaugurated in 1857 to the 2006 general election.

It has been prepared and published as a celebration of the sesqui-centennial of the first elections for a bi-cameral parliament and the inauguration of the South Australian parliament in 1857. It is the first ever compilation of the results of all South Australian parliamentary elections.

Until this publication, there was no complete record of elections for the State. It is hoped that these volumes will provide not only an historical record for the first time, but that they will be a resource data-bank for all who are interested in the electoral and political history of South Australia, an official record of election results from 1857 to 1902, and an official record of voting at polling places from 1857 to 1921.

1. SOURCES AND AVAILABILITY OF DATA

Election results from 1902 (for electorate data) and 1921 (for polling place data) were sourced from official records. As well, the compilation of results by Colin Hughes in a number of publications provided data for the period from 1890. These data included political party affiliations, and were a valuable source and check.

Other sources consulted included election Writs, 'Blue Books', unpublished MSS, journals, and general histories.

For the period from 1857 to 1902 (electorate data) and from 1857 to 1921 (polling place data), the substantive source for this publication was contemporary newspapers. Recognition should be given to their editors for a commitment to a 'newspaper of record', for they devoted considerable space to detailed results for all but a few elections.

The Advertiser was judged to be the most accurate. This newspaper did not begin publication until after the first two elections, hence the sole source for these was the Register. Both daily newspapers were consulted, but in cases of disagreement – which were very few, and minor – The Advertiser was the source used.

Other newspapers used for the colonial data were The Observer, The Chronicle, The Evening Journal and, for some elusive country results, the country newspapers were consulted.

There were two sub-sections of the data where the full details were not always available. In the very early years, some details, especially numbers of voters, informal ballot papers, and polling place results for the Legislative Council, were not published. The latter was especially the case when only a few polling places were 'yet to arrive', and they 'could not affect the result'. These phrases were the most common explanation.

The second area of incomplete publication concerned polling place results. This was mainly for some early by-elections for the Legislative Council, especially those where the whole colony was involved in the Province-wide election to fill a vacancy, contested by two or three candidates. In most of these cases, the data were published at the Division level (the House of Assembly electorate), but on a handful of occasions, no data was published.

INTRODUCTION

2. ELECTORAL LAWS

The introduction to the results of each general election for the House of Assembly and, where necessary, for the Legislative Council, provides a summary of the significant political and electoral changes in the inter-election period.

This introductory section provides a summary of the key electoral laws relevant to the election data, over the period from 1857 to 2006. It is a summary only, extracted mainly from Dean Jaensch, Community Access to the Parliamentary Electoral Processes in South Australia since 1850, State Electoral Office 2002.

Franchise

From the first election in 1857, the principle of 'one person, one vote' applied for elections to both houses.

The definition of 'person' was established as an adult male aged at least 21 years for the House of Assembly, and an adult male who satisfied restricted property qualifications for the Council.

In 1894, the definition of 'person' included females.

Aboriginal persons had the franchise from the beginning.

Effective from 1972, the right to vote was changed to 18 years of age.

Enrolment

From the first election in 1857, enrolment for the right to vote in South Australia has been, and remains, voluntary.

In the contemporary context, an electoral roll is an accurate and secure register of the names of persons eligible to vote, maintained by modern information technology processes. In the early years of elections, enrolment and the establishment of an electoral roll was a very different matter. The Returning Officer was required to establish an 'Electoral List... of all persons resident in his district entitled to vote'. The procedures included publicity, an objection procedure and, for the first election only, the production of a certificate which had to be produced at the polling place.

It was clear from the first Electoral Act of 1855-6 that there was a commitment by governments, parliaments, and electoral administrators for the rolls to be as complete and accurate as possible, and that there was the widest opportunity for all citizens to have their enrolment recorded, and recorded accurately.

Voting

From the first election in 1857 until 1890, the only way for a person to vote was to attend a polling place. For voters in the sparsely-settled rural areas, this often involved travelling a considerable distance, despite the constant establishment of new polling places.

In 1890, absent voting was introduced, originally to allow seamen access to the polls. Absent voting was suggested in 1861, but rejected due to the 'problem of secrecy of the vote'. From 1890, it was available to all voters who could make their case, and the voting process was administered by a postmaster.

In 1929, postal voting was introduced for people who would be absent from their electorate on polling day, or who were not 'within five miles by the nearest practicable route of any polling place'. Institutional voting was introduced in 1976. In 1985, pre-poll voting was introduced, and absent, postal and pre-poll voting were subsumed under the heading of declaration voting. Mobile polling in remote locations was also introduced in 1985.

Methods of voting

In the first election, the method of voting was for the elector to delete the names of candidates whom he did not want to support. This proved to be too complex, especially in the case of the Legislative Council with 27 candidates. For the 1860 election, the procedure was changed to placing a X by the names which were supported. This system was retained until 1929, when contingency voting was introduced (see below). Preferences were utilised for the first time. In single-member districts, a formal ballot required sequential numbers for all candidates; in the case of two or more members, a formal vote required sequential numbers to be shown for 'twice the number of candidates to be elected plus one', but allowed further preferences if desired.

INTRODUCTION

In 1936, when all electorates for the House of Assembly became single-member, this contingency voting was effectively changed to the present system of preferential voting. Preferences have to be shown for all candidates. The Legislative Council system continued with multi-member electorates and contingency voting until 1973, when proportional representation was introduced.

Plumping

From the first election, the elector had the right to plump. That is, he had the right to vote for only one candidate in a multi-member electorate. For the colonial period, the numbers of plumpers were regularly published, but towards the end of the 1880s, this reporting became sporadic. Information on plumping is therefore included in the data only for the colonial period.

'Compulsory voting'

From 1857 to 1942, voting was voluntary. In 1942, the Electoral Act was amended to introduce 'compulsory voting' for enrolled House of Assembly electors. In 1985, this was also applied to the Legislative Council.

In fact, there cannot be a compulsion to vote. Rather, the enrolled elector is required to receive a ballot paper and to deposit that paper in the correct receptacle. In practice, there is a general assumption that compulsory voting applies.

3. TRANSLATING VOTES TO SEATS

Over the 150 years of democratic elections, the legislators experimented with a number of different voting systems. The following outlines the systems, and provides examples.

First Past the Post (FPP)

This system, also referred to as the 'plurality' system, applied to all South Australian elections from 1857 to 1929. It is based on the principle of a simple majority – the candidate in a single-member electorate who wins the largest number of votes wins the seat. In a multi-member electorate, for example electing three members, the candidates who win the highest, second-highest, and third-highest proportions of the formal votes are elected.

Voting was by a x marked by the candidate(s) of choice, except for the first, 1857, election, when voting was by deletion of candidates not supported.

This system was simple for both electors and counters. But it rarely produced a result at which an elected member could claim that he represented a majority of the voters. In the election for Yorke Peninsula in 1890, there were 20 candidates for the two-member electorate. The members elected received 19.2% and 12.6% of the formal votes.

Contingency voting

This system was introduced for both the House of Assembly and the Legislative Council in 1929. It introduced preferences for the first time.

In a single-member electorate, electors were required to number all candidates with sequential numbers. In a multi-member contest, electors were required to mark sequential numbers for 'not less than twice the number of candidates to be elected, plus one', but could continue with preferences beyond this.

In single-member electorates, a candidate with an absolute majority (at least 50% + 1 vote) of the formal votes was elected. If no candidate received an absolute majority, the candidate with the fewest 1st preference votes was excluded, and 'each of his un-exhausted ballot-papers' was transferred in terms of the 2nd preference shown. This process continued until one candidate received an absolute majority.

INTRODUCTION

In multi-member electorates, for example a three-member electorate, the counting process was complex. If any candidate received an absolute majority, he or she was declared elected. To establish the second elected candidate, all of the votes for the elected candidate were transferred in accordance with 2nd preferences. If no candidate received an absolute majority, then the votes for the least supported candidate were transferred in terms of preferences shown, and this process continued until an absolute majority was obtained. To establish the third elected candidate, the 1st preference votes for the elected candidates were transferred again, and further exclusions carried out, until the third absolute majority was attained.

Example: Electorate of Wooroora, 1933 general election.

1st preference votes

Candidates	Affil.	Votes	%
Butler RL*	LCL	3 256	46.3
Collins M		2 024	28.8
Parker AJ		833	11.8
Cameron AG*	LCL	481	6.8
Dennison S*	LCL	278	4.0
Willis EGE		165	2.3

There was no absolute majority, hence Willis, Dennison and Cameron were excluded, and Butler was elected.

BUTLER	LCL	3 652	51.9	elected
Collins		2 376	33.8
Parker		1 009	14.3

To establish the second elected candidate, the count returned to 1st preference votes. All 1st preference votes for the elected Butler were transferred by 2nd preferences, with the result:

Cameron	LCL	3 445	49.0
Collins		2 119	30.2
Parker		847	12.0
Dennison	LCL	451	6.4
Willis		175	2.5

In the absence of an absolute majority, Willis and Dennison were excluded, with Cameron elected.

CAMERON	LCL	3 738	53.1	elected
Collins		2 307	32.8
Parker		992	14.1

To establish the third elected member, the count returned to 1st preference votes. All 1st preference votes for the elected Butler and Cameron were transferred according to 2nd preferences, with the result:

DENNISON	LCL	3 645	51.8	elected
Collins		2 308	32.8
Parker		882	12.5
Willis		202	2.9

As this example demonstrates, when political parties nominated three candidates in a three-member electorate, the effect of contingency voting was to strongly favour the election of all three. The return to 1st preference votes to allocate preferences virtually ensured this.

Preferential Voting

The system of contingent voting which was used in the multi-member electorates from 1930, was effectively changed to preferential voting in the single-member electorates which were introduced for the House of Assembly in 1936. In this system, the 1st preference votes are not transferred; the process of establishing an absolute majority utilises the exclusion of the least supported candidate(s).

INTRODUCTION

For example, in the electorate of Burra in 1938, the 1st preference votes were:

Candidates	Affil.	Votes	%
McDonald AD	LCL	1 530	39.1
Canny TJ	ALP	1 181	30.2
George EE		742	19.0
Collins M		456	11.7

Collins was excluded:

McDonald AD	LCL	1 650	42.2
Canny TJ		1 271	32.5
George EE		988	25.3

George was excluded:

McDONALD AD	LCL	2 305	59.0	elected
Canny TJ		1 604	41.0

This system has been used in House of Assembly elections since 1938.

Contingency voting applied for Legislative Council elections until 1975, when a variant of proportional voting – a ‘list system’ - in a single State-wide electorate was introduced.

Closed List System – Legislative Council

The ballot paper contained candidates in groups – parties, groups and individuals. Electors were not able to vote for individual candidates, but had to mark sequential numbers next to each list.

The subsequent counting system was complex. The first step was to calculate the ‘prescribed number’ by dividing the total number of 1st preference votes by one more than the number of vacant seats and dividing the result by two. This established half a quota.

The second step was to exclude from the count any list whose support in 1st preference votes was less than the half-quota. The ballot papers of these excluded lists were transferred in accordance with 2nd preferences to the lists remaining in the count.

The third stage was the calculation of the election quota, the Droop quota, by dividing the number of formal 1st preferences votes by one more than the number of vacant seats, and increasing the quotient obtained by one. Any list which achieved a quota received one seat, two quotas received two seats, and so on. After the count of full quotas, the remaining seats were filled by the lists which had the highest proportion of the quota. Beyond the initial allocation of preferences from the excluded lists, there was no further preference allocation.

Example: 1975 election, 11 vacant seats

Formal votes: 687 063 Prescribed number: 28 628 Quota: 57 058

INTRODUCTION

Proportional representation, single transferable vote - Legislative Council 1982

Electors had the right to vote for individual candidates, although the ballot paper included candidates for each party in a group. Electors had to place sequential numbers by each candidate.

The count required the calculation of a quota – the number of formal votes divided by the number of vacant seats + one and increasing the quotient obtained by one. Any candidate who received a quota on 1st preference was elected. To fill the next set of seats, the surplus votes from elected candidates were transferred to the remaining candidates on the basis of preferences indicated. To fill the final set of seats, the least supported candidates were excluded and preferences transferred until all quotas were filled.

In 1985, the ballot paper was modified to allow the elector a choice between 'above/below the line', with the Droop quota applied. The 'above' the line was based on a group list, which required electors to mark one voting square, thus indicating support for one party/group, and acceptance of the preference allocations decided by that party/group. The 'below' required electors to mark every candidate with sequential numbers. The 'above' is referred to as the Ticket vote.

4. REDISTRIBUTIONS

Over the period 1857 – 2006, the 'electoral map' was changed on many occasions. Redistributions were sometimes caused by an alteration of the numbers of members, sometimes by decisions in the parliament concerning the 'weighting' which was to be applied to the rural electorates, and sometimes by decisions to vary the basis of representation. Since 1991, a redistribution is required to be conducted after each general election. The following is a summary of redistributions which were carried.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL

6. LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL DISTRICTS SINCE 1857

There have been a total of nine Legislative Council districts since 1857. The then Province of South Australia formed the district for the upper house of a bicameral Parliament from 1857 to 1884. Commencing in 1884 the Legislative Council was divided into 4 districts, then 5 in 1915, and re-formed as one district in 1975 comprising the now State of South Australia (in existence since federation in 1901). The Province and State of South Australia represent the same geographical area, except for the Northern Territory, which was initially part of South Australia but was transferred to the Commonwealth in 1911.

Shading indicates existence in years shown.

7. POLITICAL PARTIES

All elections in South Australia, from the 1857 election which inaugurated the bicameral parliament, until two by-elections for the House of Assembly in 1891, and the 1891 Legislative Council general election, were contested by independents. There were no political parties in existence.

The first political party – the United Labor Party (ULP) – was formed on 7 January 1891, by the Trades and Labour Council. Its first contest was for the Legislative Council in that year, with the remarkable success of winning three of the eight available seats.

The modern Liberal party had its genesis in 1893, with the name National Defence League (NDL). Its stated aim was to resist the Labor party.

These two parties increasingly dominated the elections and the parliaments. By the 1902 election, a 'two-party system' seemed firmly in place. The Labor and (renamed) Australian National League (ANL) won 22 of the 42 seats in the House of Assembly, and half of the seats in the Legislative Council.

But other parties emerged. In 1905, the Farmers and Producers Political Union (FPPU) was formed by the rural entrepreneurs, and in 1906, wheat farmers formed the Liberal and Democratic Union (LDU). These three non-Labor parties contested against each other until 1909, when they decided to amalgamate to form the Liberal Union.

From this developed the Liberal federation, the Liberal Party and, following amalgamation with the then Country Party in 1932, the Liberal and Country League (LCL). In 1976, the LCL re-named itself the Liberal Party.

The Country Party, which formed in time for the 1924 election, had its genesis in the FPPU, the LDU, the Farmers' and Settlers Party (F&S) and the Progressive Country Party (PCP). The Country Party disappeared as a separate organization in 1932, re-emerged in 1963, and under its subsequent names of National Country Party and now National Party, has contested all elections since 1965.

Especially since the 1960s, a multi-party system contesting elections has rapidly developed.

Despite the domination of elections (and of the parliaments) by political parties since 1910, they remained an 'informal' component of official election data in South Australia until very recently.

Parties remained outside of the electoral legislation and it was not until 1985 that they received official recognition. Prior to that, the term 'groups' was used in contests where the nature of the electoral system demanded it – contingent voting, for example. The Electoral Act of that year introduced party registration, and allowed the placing of the names of registered parties on the ballot paper for the first time. (For a reference link to developments in the Electoral Act, see Dean Jaensch, Community Access to the Parliamentary Electoral Processes in South Australia since 1850, State Electoral Office 2002).

INTRODUCTION

8. PRESENTATION AND FORMAT OF DATA

The data for House of Assembly elections are set out in Volume 1; for the Legislative Council in Volume 2.

1857 – 1921

As there are no official polling place results for this period extant, polling place data are included for:

- General election
- By-elections

1857 - 2006

Summary data for the period includes:

- General election
 - data at the Province/State level
 - data at the electorate level
- By-elections
 - data at the electorate level

The information is presented in a standard order:

1. General election (electorate data)
2. By-elections (electorate data)
3. For the period 1857 – 1921, polling place data for general then by-elections.

Electorate Summary Data

The electorate results for both the House of Assembly and Legislative Council are presented in a two-section summary table. For each electorate/division, the first section of the table displays the voting summary and the second section displays the candidate summary – name, affiliation (if applicable), number and percentage of votes received and, for the House of Assembly, results after distribution of preferences (where applicable).

HISTORY OF SOUTH AUSTRALIAN ELECTIONS

THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL

PART 1

1857 - 1881

1857 GENERAL ELECTION

This first election for the Legislative Council as an upper house of a bicameral Parliament was held on 9 March, with 27 candidates contesting the 18 seats in the Province.

The franchise was limited to males of at least the age of 21 who satisfied the property qualification.

The method of voting required the deletion of names of candidates not supported. This was the only time this method was used. From 1861 to 1929, the method was a 'cross in a box' for the supported candidate(s).

HISTORY OF SOUTH AUSTRALIAN ELECTIONS

THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL

PART 2

1882 - 1927

1882 GENERAL ELECTION

In 1881, the Legislative Council was re-structured from a single Province-wide electorate of 18 members to four districts electing six members each – a total membership of 24. Three members in each district retired every four years.

1882 was a 'special' election called after the enlargement of the Council from 18 to 24 members, and to allow for the division of the Province into the four 6-member electorates.

1902 GENERAL ELECTION

Following federation, the South Australian parliament was reduced in membership, and the Council was reduced from 24 members to 18 members, still elected from four districts. Three members of the Legislative Council had resigned and subsequently won a seat in the new federal parliament. This election also followed a dissolution of both houses, and hence the election was for six members in Central, and four members each in North Eastern, Northern and Southern.

1910 GENERAL ELECTION

In 1907, the Legislative Council agreed to the first broadening of the property restrictions since 1857: a dwelling place with an annual rent of at least 17 pounds. It also extended the franchise to ministers of religion, school head teachers, postmasters, railway stationmasters, and the officer in charge of a police station. The North Eastern district was changed to Midland.

1918 GENERAL ELECTION

In 1913, the franchise was extended to the 'inhabitant occupier' of a house, but not to the spouse of such a person

In the same year, the Council was enlarged from 16 to 20 members, and from four to five districts, each electing four members.

HISTORY OF SOUTH AUSTRALIAN ELECTIONS

THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL

PART 3

1930 - 1973

1930 GENERAL ELECTION

This election saw the introduction of contingency voting for elections to the Council. Electors were required to provide preferences for the first time, showing sequential numbers to a minimum of twice the number of vacant seats plus one or, where there were fewer candidates than that requirement, to number all candidates.

The effect of contingency voting, together with the grouping of candidates by party on the ballot paper, was to virtually ensure that one party would win both seats in the two-member electorates. The counting process, which involved transferring all of the votes for an elected candidate by second preferences, meant that, given the likelihood that voters would place a second preference for a candidate in the party group, there was little likelihood of a severe leakage to another party.

This system was retained until the 1975 election.

HISTORY OF SOUTH AUSTRALIAN ELECTIONS

THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL

PART 4

1975 - 2006

1975 GENERAL ELECTION

This election saw the return to a single, State-wide electorate, and the introduction of a system of proportional representation based on a 'closed list' system. Voters were not permitted to support individual candidates, merely to mark sequential numbers for party lists. Casual vacancies were filled by party nominations, endorsed by a joint meeting of both houses of parliament.

In 1973, full adult suffrage was introduced, effective at the 1975 election.

The counting process has been explained in the Introduction, but in essence it involved the exclusion of any party which failed to win half of the prescribed quota, and the transfer of second preferences. There was no further preference transfer, and seats were allocated on the basis of full quotas received and, for the final seat(s), on the largest proportion of a quota. This system contained serious disadvantages for minor parties.

The system applied in the 1975 and 1979 general elections

1985 GENERAL ELECTION

This election saw the introduction of “above the line” voting. Electors were given a choice between voting “above the line” – simply marking the box of one party, or voting “below the line” and providing sequential preferences for all candidates.

The former involved the “ticket vote”, under which preferences were allocated in terms of tickets registered with the Electoral Commissioner.

Election remained a matter of achieving a quota of votes.

Compulsory voting was applied to Council elections for the first time and candidate affiliations appeared on the ballot paper.

Seats Won: ALP 5, LIB 5, DEM 1
